Temporal Changes in the Pathologic Anatomy and Molecular Proteins Expression of Tumor in Plasma and Serum in Rhesus Monkeys Following Intravenous Injection of Monkey Tumor Viruses Abstract Background RNAi is an RNA-mediated gene silencing process in which double-stranded RNA is processed to small interfering RNA (siRNA) in the cytoplasm that subsequently binds to an RNA-induced silencing complex (RISC) to silence the target gene. Objective We used a rhesus monkey model to analyze the dynamic changes in the expression of mRNA, protein, and their regulators in tumors and in the circulatory system during infection with simian retrovirus-sorted x macaque (SRMV-X) or gibbon adenovirus-sorted macaque (GAV-M) via the systemic route. Results We documented the coordinated down-regulation of mRNA expression and corresponding protein suppression in tumors, most notably in GAV-M tumors, within 24 h, followed by a substantial recovery in systemic mRNA expression at 48 h but not in protein expression. We detected significant effects on the serum and plasma of GAV-M infection and the systemic suppression of multiple extracellular matrix proteins in the tumors but not in serum. Conclusion Our results provide an explanation for the DLL, library, and other important system files are one of the most common things that computer users face. Evaluation of a manual motor test in children with central nervous system tumors. Children with malignant tumors frequently suffer from various disturbances in cerebral motor functions. Paediatric-specific tests of motor functions are rare and the results of many of these are often not valid or reproducible. We tested the reliability of a test of manual motor performance in children with supratentorial tumors using a standardised hand-held dynamometer. In this test, the right hand dynamometer is applied to the hand of an unfamiliar child to obtain values for the manual dynamometry of the dominant hand. The purpose of this study was to assess the reliability of this test. The test was performed twice on a sample of 26 healthy children in order to assess test-retest reliability. The intra-class correlation coefficient (ICC) was 0.87. The test was performed again on a sample of 12 children with supratentorial tumors. A significant difference was found between the mean result of the healthy children and the children with supratentorial tumors for repeated manual dynamometry. We concluded that the test is reliable. Using the standardised test of manual performance described in this study, the manual dynamometry could serve as a surrogate for the study of motor dysfunction in children with tumors.
