There are a few types of arrest warrants that are issued, and a judge will decide whether an arrest warrant is appropriate depending on the type of crime that has been alleged against the person or the alleged criminal activity. Types of Arrest Warrants A warrant is issued by a judge as a sign that the judge believes the information provided by a law enforcement official is sufficient to issue the warrant. A criminal complaint is filed by a law enforcement official. A criminal complaint is a formal document that is used to seek charges against someone who is alleged to have committed a specific crime. It is usually issued by a law enforcement official, and it is a formal document that requires the accused to be given notice of the complaint against them. An arrest warrant is typically issued by a judge based on a criminal complaint that has been filed by a law enforcement official. It is likely that an arrest warrant is going to be issued if the judge believes that it is probable that the person who is wanted by law enforcement officials will be apprehended. A warrant for an arrest is a legal document that is executed by law enforcement officials once they have obtained a person's location and they have found that they are not going to be released. A warrant can be issued in many different situations. For instance, a warrant for an arrest can be issued for a person who has been wanted for escaping from a prison or a person who has been accused of a violent crime. A search warrant is a legal document that is typically issued by a judge based on the input from law enforcement officials. A search warrant is a document that allows law enforcement officials to search a person's property or person if they have a basis for concluding that the person will be able to take items away from the searched location without being identified. A search warrant can be issued for a person who has been accused of a crime that involves the possession of firearms or other items such as drugs or stolen property. Bond for Failure to Appear A bond is a legal instrument that is issued by a judge to ensure that a person, who has been accused of a crime, will show up to their court hearings. A bond will ensure that the accused will be found and will require the accused to make bail that is set in court if they are able to make the bail. A

Possible Duplicate: What is CDATA and how do I use it? I have a few XML files like the following: Preface No part of this book is legal tender. Does the \[CDATA\] between the and tags indicate that between the tags are just whitespace, and are CDATA or that the data is not legal XML or XHTML? A: this is the definition of CDATA CDATA stands for "Cdata like any other data". So it can be thought of as representing the union of two possibilities: When you have two structures on the same line of a file, a cdata node would be between the two structures, and the cdata would include all characters between the two structures When you have a single cdata structure separated by one or more other characters, then the cdata node would include any character between the two structures So you could say that the cdata that start a xml file would include all characters that would be considered as a cdata character, and not a text, and its possible to have cdata tag in a xml file. here is the official definition of cdata CDATA. CDATA stands for C 3e33713323
