He has a clear message that every college student needs to hear. It is addressed specifically to the new incoming freshmen and graduate students in a course I recently taught about college learning and research. The course was at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard. The course focused on the three main learning modes (traditional, non-traditional, and online) and the different tools of each. That approach was successful. But Thomas' message is not content-specific; it is about being able to think. And he is very good at making that case. Thomas is not only a brilliant mind; he is also a gifted teacher. He is aware of the power of the written word and how to use it to move people. He does not belabor the point; he hits you over the head with it. Like Socrates, who asked his students only about what they knew, Thomas asks only the most interesting questions: "What are you learning? Where are you getting this knowledge from? How do you prove it?" Walking on stage, Thomas gave a string of short, poignant stories, examples, and analogies. I like the way he came back to the point. He never lost his connection to the material and the audience. Thomas has a beautiful skill at storytelling. Without knowing what he wanted to say, I could tell by his body language alone that he was comfortable with the material he was about to teach. By the time he was on stage, everything had come together. Then he launched into a series of examples that should be familiar to all people who work in and around the field of education. I am a big fan of Dr. Thomas' insights. They come from years of experience in the classroom

Health influences on attitudes towards psychological therapies: results from the All-Ireland Survey of Mental Health in Ireland. Little is known about health influences on attitudes towards psychological therapies, although there is evidence that users of these therapies are more likely to have a positive attitude towards them than those who have not used them. The focus of the current study was therefore to ascertain which factors account for differences in attitudes towards psychological therapies among users and non-users. Attitudes towards psychological therapies were assessed among a representative sample (N=469) of community dwelling adults aged 18 to 64 years, who lived in Ireland and had not used psychological therapies in the last three years. Regression analyses were undertaken to identify factors associated with attitudes towards psychological therapies. In terms of attitudes towards specific psychological therapies, findings revealed that some were significantly more positive among users than non-users, while others were less so. Among the factors examined, there was some evidence that having a mental health condition and routine contact with mental health services were both significantly positively related to attitudes towards cognitive behavioural therapy. There were also some indications that attitudes towards psychoanalytic and other therapies were more positive among users than non-users. These findings show that attitudes towards psychological therapies are not only influenced by personal characteristics, but also by other factors such as access to mental health services and routine contact with mental health professionals. This study highlights the need for continued empirical investigation of the relationship between personal factors and attitudes towards psychological therapies, and provides a basis for future research regarding the potential for psychological therapies to address inequalities in mental health care. Hearts of Iron IV brings the classic wargame series into the next generation. Unique features and beautifully rendered historical visuals bring your favorite era in history to life. The game lets you play as one of 6 nations in the World War II era. The replayability and complexity of the game are never ending. You can play through any campaign or challenge a friend in the new comprehensive replay system. Play as any nation during the war and make history. Key Features: War Story Mode: New Hearts of Iron IV lets you play through any campaign by choosing your nation and guiding your nation through war. World War II: Hearts of Iron IV gives players a multitude of options for a war that spans the globe. Players will experience life and death decisions as they fight through pivotal moments of World War II such as Pearl Harbor, D-Day, and the Battle of Britain. Situations Editor: The Situation Editor, an innovative new feature, allows players to create new historical scenarios using historical events and outcomes. For example, you can have two million people surrender, or have a naval battle at the end of the war. My Campaign: My Campaign allows you to save a scenario to play at a later time and share with your friends. Replay: Hearts of Iron IV has a new comprehensive and flexible replay system. Choose between three play modes: Endless War, Quick, and Staged. Endless War lets you play any scenario at any time. Quick lets you jump into an event. For example, you could jump right into the battle of Midway at any time. Staged lets you play your scenario over and over again, from the beginning through the end. Strategy: Easy to use interface, simulation engine, and no-nonsense interface. All information is accessible at any time. Gamepad Support: Designed to maximize experience on a gamepad. Deals with stat modifiers: Many units in Hearts of Iron IV have stat modifiers such as Leadership and Body Counts. These stats can mess up your game if they are not dealt with properly. Quick skirmish: Play a game without all the complicated rules. Control multiple units at once in this fully customizable game. Winning the peace: Hearts of Iron IV has a comprehensive peace agreement system. When war is declared, a peace offer can be made by the winner. A war may be ended by either the peace process going well, being rejected, or the winner reaching a peace agreement. Community: Hearts of Iron IV features a well-designed website c9d1549cdd imony: 9/1/12 Today I am testifying against my wife because she is not disclosing $868,000 in household assets. She is not allowing me to have account ownership in her checking or savings accounts. My annual family expenses are $80,000 per year, which includes mortgage payments, auto payments, etc. I have long-term disability insurance, this is not the money she does not want to disclose. I could use this money or I could sell my car and save $25,000 per year in gas and maintenance which I am afraid if I do she will not pay me. I see her friends and her family with so much more wealth, than I would be living with such a low family income. I fear that I am wasting my life as a father, therefore unable to provide for my family since I made the wrong decision to marry her and give her kids custody. I refused to sign anything at the beginning of our marriage, but now everything we shared is gone. I am in a lot of emotional pain. No father deserves to give his children up and it pisses me off that I have to. What are my options? Thanks 01/17/13 Dee Hi Dee, I'm very sorry to hear about your situation. Thank you for letting me know that you are relying on the court's care for the safety and well-being of your children, as this is actually the foremost concern that the court has for your children. You also asked if there is anything we can do to help you, so I'm going to give you the information that I have available for you, so that you may see if it might help you in your circumstances. First, I would like to know more about the financial situation with your wife. As you wrote, it is to your financial detriment that she is not allowing you to have an account ownership in her checking or savings accounts. Are you looking for anything other than just for these accounts to be in your name? Have you stated to your wife that you are concerned that the money would not be used properly? Would she feel safer if you signed some documents that addressed her accounts for the purpose of emergency funds, or saving money for whatever it is that would be your hope for the money to be spent for? Are there things about her that are concerning? Also, what is her mother's involvement in your situation? I know that her mother usually controls the child's lifestyle.
