A: Something like this, $text = preg_replace('/\A[a-z0-9]{20}.*\z/U', '', $text); Q: Dynamic import in Angular 6 I have a component/module where I have a function call a server and get back the data and set the component's property on a timer (so that the data hasn't changed for too long and therefore no need to re-render the component). However, when I do the import for the component it imports the data as soon as the function is called, which isn't necessary because it should be fetched on a timer. How can I achieve this? Is there a way I can import the component when the timer is triggered. A: You can use a template reference variable and a *ngIf directive for that: @Component({ selector: 'my-component', templateUrl: './my-component.html' }) export class MyComponent { myRef: TemplateRef; constructor(private dMng: MyService) { } ngOnInit() { let data; this.myRef = this.dMng.getData().map(data => this.dMng.getData()); this.subscribe(); // Will be displayed when the data hasn't changed in the last second. setTimeout(() => { this.myRef.destroy(); }, 1000); } private subscribe() { this.dMng.getData().subscribe(data => { this.myRef.instance.property = data; }); } } my-component.html: {{ myRef.instance.property }} Sunday, July 29, 2008 Keller's Plumbing: Nature's Guardian Keller's Plumbing, with their chemical-free cleaning products and environmentally friendly products, are helping protect our environment. As is well known in the casino gaming world, there is a need to control access to and use of each gaming device. There is a need to provide for the security of the gaming devices and payment of the players. A need to track the actual use of the gaming device and provide reports and audit information to the casino are also required in order to determine a proper commission payment to the house. The systems and methods for controlling access to gaming devices and monitoring use of the gaming devices are known in the art. One of the
