The present invention relates generally to computerized gaming and more particularly to a system and method for facilitating wagering activities on a computerized gaming machine. Computerized gaming has become a multi-billion dollar industry. Most computers generate and display the visual elements of games. Some computers generate audio signals and other computers generate tactile responses. Still other computers track the player's activity and communicate that activity to other computers. Typically, the host computer is connected to a visual display and speakers or headphones. The visual display may comprise, for example, a cathode-ray tube (CRT), a liquid crystal display (LCD), a light emitting diode (LED), or a plasma display. A computerized gaming network exists in the prior art. According to this network, the host computer is connected to a visual display, speakers, user input devices, and a server. The server is connected to the host computer and one or more remotely located client computers. The server remotely controls various game specific visual displays, audio components, and user input devices. The server transmits player commands to the host computer and receives information from the host computer. The server stores this information and transmits the information to the client computers for display. Computerized gaming networks in the prior art are used for playing games between players located in remote places. The computer gaming networks are not for facilitating wagering. Wagering allows a remote player to wager on a game in a casino or other gaming location without being physically present in the casino or other gaming location. Wagering allows the player to be wagering from a remote location, such as a hotel room. Thus, there is a need for a system and method for facilitating wagering on a computerized gaming machine. A.2d at 968, 969; and (c) when submitted for the first time to the trial court, to avoid forfeiting the trial objection. United States v. Vieira, 819 F.2d 1002, 1004 (5th Cir. 1987); Diaz's defense counsel filed no pretrial motion to compel independent source evidence or to exclude the cocaine evidence. The weather and repeated and regular grooming are essential for healthy skin, but some breeds are naturally more prone to conditions like skin rashes or allergies. For your dog's skin to look healthy, it needs to be properly groomed. Get started by reading through this blog to learn how to properly brush and groom your dog. Brushing Your Dog's Hair Properly brushing your dog's hair is essential to make sure it remains healthy and shiny. A quick first brush will remove dead hair and grass, but for a more thorough job, you'll need to use a brush intended for your dog's breed. If you know the markings for your breed, you should be able to find one that fits your dog's head. You should also avoid the use of nylon, nylon bristle, rubber, boar bristle, or nylon/rubber brushes for the best results. Brushing Your Dog's Feet Brushing your dog's feet will help to keep their paws clean. Your dog's paws grow hair that should be trimmed or removed regularly. Before you do any grooming, make sure you can perform the job yourself. When trimming or removing dog's paws, you should use scissors rather than sharp blades. Doing this can help prevent your dog from suffering a deep injury if they step on an exposed metal nail. Grooming Your Dog's Head It's important to keep your dog's head clean and free from dirt and hair. When your dog has a dirty head, bacteria can enter their bloodstream, which may lead to serious health problems like pneumonia. Also, the dirt in your dog's head can block their ears, eyes, and nose and hinder their ability to hear, see, and breathe normally
